WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1922.

There is to be a village caucus tonight at 8 o'clock and from several indications it is apparent that there is more interest than there has been some times and extending to several parts of the ticket. The people of a town or state get just as good government as they deserve and this applies with particular force to a village. If a majority of the voters attending caucuses and local elections are patriotic, unselfish and are there for the purpose of doing the best they can for their community, there will be no serious or long continued trouble with the government of that town. If, however, the voters, or a majority of them, habitually go to the polls with a selfish desire to put something across, to give some faction or group a little advantage, to elect to office somebody who represents some scheming interest of business, capital, or labor, some lodge, church or society, some plan to control appointments or contracts, or any other deal not for the good of the whole public, then that community is in serious trouble. There ought to be two thousand voters at the caucus tonight and three thousand at the town meeting next Tuesday. If that number should actually go, however, Bennington caucuses and town elections would have to be held in the street or on Morgan park.

Louis A. Filpo, heavyweight champion of South America, is in New York looking for bouts.

Walter Holke, first baseman of the Braves, is an active member of the St. Louis Evangelical brotherhood. Admirers of Charles Weinert, the Newark heavyweight, say he showed his gameness recently by getting married.

Dan Dowd, the New England heavyweight, will be out of the boxing game for some time because of an attack of erysipelas.

With the exception of half a dozen young pitchers the New York Yankees will try out very few rookies this spring.

Manager Bill Gleason has a big task this spring in trying to develop a winning White Sox combination with the material at hand.

A boxer doesn't seem to amount to much nowadays unless he draws an occasional suspension from some State boxing commission.

Boxing fans, who have been eager to know if young Bob Fitzsimmons is really there as a fighter, will probably find out when Bob meets Martin Burke in New Orleans.

Billard fans claim that the Jake Schaefer-Willie Hoppe championship 182 ballgame match in Chicago next month will be a far greater attraction than the recent match in which Schaefer copped Hoppe's crown. Dave's much-discussed "balk" movement will have umpires, players and fans all trying to figure out if it is or it isn't.
